DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This structure is unusual in that it is one of the older frame structures that has survived without drastic modification. It is one and one-half stories, frame, and north-facing. The frame is a vertical plank siding. A high stone cellar protrudes from the southern side of the house, where the kitchen once was. The east and west exposures are two bays across, the southern one, ~~five~~, and the northern one, ~~four~~. The windows have been replaced and are 6 X 6. Two such windows are on the attic level on either end of the structure. The windows on the exposed cellar wall on the south face are 2 X 2's and six-light casements. Three double sets of 2 X 2 cellar openings are located on the northern wall. The first floor has recent opposite doors on the northern and southern embrasures, each with a four-light transom. The cellar/ground floor level has a doorway directly below the southern entrance. The regular cellar-way is positioned near the northeast corner. The slate roof is gable-flank, with three dormers on the southern slope, the center one containing double windows. All of the dormers are gabled. A single-bay shed porch shelters the northern doorway, while the southern side has a four-bay, double-deck covering with a shed roof. The chimneys are outside ends and are of stone, with brick tops. They are located along the eastern and western ends.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This home is said to date from before 1800. It is located on a tract that was part of a 1600-acre purchase that John Stump made from Thomas Harrison in 1790. Harrison's lands were called Lines Bents and Lines Addition. This property was sold to Rev. William B. Stephenson in 1790, and it was around this time that the house was built. Stephenson was extremely active in local affairs, founding in 1804 the "Farmers' Society of Harford County", the first organization of its kind in Harford County. This group constructed and operated a gypsum plaster mill, located near Lapidum. From 1813 until 1821, Stephenson presided over the Rock Run Academy, where many of the prominent local men were educated in their youth. In 1825, the school was moved from Rock Run Church to another site and was conducted by the minister's daughter, Elizabeth. The latter location could have been located near the existing house under construction. In 1829, the house was acquired by Dr. John Archer for the use of his wife, Ann, as a summer residence. The house was used by the Archer family until Ann's death in 1871.
